For centuries countless women have fought to elevate the status of women in society, from being second-rate citizen to being full-fledged ones. Though some may have succeeded and have the winds of change carry their messages, oftentimes, most of their voices were subverted and buried in the sands of time. And what was left was the echo of their voices recalled by a few who listened to their cries for change. And it is through these few where the story of one suffragist was brought back to the light.

In Susan Savion's Quoting Matilda, get to know the struggles of a woman who dared to defy the norms of her day and even raised a hue and cry for change. Understand the woman behind the suffragist through her words and the causes she championed. Admire how she tried to rewrite the history of women in her corner of the world.

Charles Feggans

Charles Feggans grew up with eight siblings. He enlisted in the US Marine Corps as a way to break poverty's cycle. Fortunately, it worked. He spent six years in several types of naval ships and then helped supply combat troops in a Vietnam camp for more than a year. After leaving the corps, he went to college and finished his bachelor's degree.

In Unpleasant Pastures, Charles introduces readers to Jeff Richard who enlisted into the US Marine Corps fresh from his high school graduation. Jeff's camp is at the heart of the Vietnam War. His camp is bombed daily, but war is not the only thing Jeff experiences in Vietnam.

Sherri C. Southers and Robert W. Spruce are based in Texas. They are co-authors of numerous published books, including a series that is centered on a laidback, white labradoodle called Hudson. The eleven books in the series chronicle the adventures that the fedora-wearing pooch has around the neighborhood. Additionally, both authors wrote A Journey of a New Person, which explore the notion that women have more natural characteristics that are like God than men. The book invites readers to see relationships between men and women in a different light. It highlights the characteristics that are innately male and female to understand their relationships better.
