"It's not over, Tom.
It's not over. My time will come. Ol' Stargut ought not to kilt my man."

G. R. Jerry has always nurtured an interest in the macabre. In one of his books, Tom and Lovey: Under the Moon into the Wood, he writes about a rural Midwestern town run by Stargut, the local sheriff who commands and creates the mutant inhabitants who reside in the Village of Wrong. Lovey swears to unearth the sheriff's plans and avenge her husband's death. But as she gets closer to the truth, her friend and neighbor, Patty, begins acting strange. The two are joined by a preacher of sorts, Tom, who arrives at the town just in time for them to band together, converging for a showdown with Stargut down the doorsteps of hell.

Susan A. Savion

Quoting Matilda

The Words and History of a Forgotten Suffragist

Susan A. Savion taught for many years. As a reading specialist, she has devoted her time and talents into writing her book, Quoting Matilda: The Words and History of a Forgotten Suffragist. The book is an extraordinary voyage through time as it tells the tales of the women's suffrage movement in the US. It features the struggles, triumphs, and enduring legacy of Matilda Joslyn Gage and other notable women in history who championed the abolitionist era. With meticulous research and heartfelt storytelling, Savion breathes life into the fascinating world of this remarkable visionary and her fight for equality. This book intertwines past and present, illuminating the continued relevance of Matilda's views in our contemporary world.

“A sheep in wolves clothing,” he replied, turning, “witch of wolves. I regret I will not see you in hell, Devil No Name.”

Tom and Lovey is a duology about a fantastical world filled with good and evil. Its author, G. R. Jerry, has written and published several books with mystical worlds and characters, born from his lifetime interest in them. In its second book, Pursuit of the Thunderbird, Lovey is getting used to her newfound supernatural abilities. She journeys with Tom to solve the mystery of the disappearance of Tom’s mentor, Red Deer. Red Deer, joined by the Thunderbird and other lingering spirits guiding them to a deadly faceoff in the midst of a recurring reincarnation ritual held by the dead-born twin of Red Deer’s granddaughter, Moon in Her Eyes. Together, Tom, Lovey, and their companions face off with Devil No Name, the evil spirit of Red Deer’s granddaughter’s dead-born twin.
